THE SHE-WOLF

The two men were moving over the land as fast as they could go. They were riding a sled that was pulled by six dogs. The men were tired. It was very cold, and the land was covered with snow. Even the trees looked white.

The men stopped. They started feeding the dogs. Then there was a cry. It was the cry of a wolf.

"They're getting closer," said the man feeding the dogs. His name was Bill.

"Yes," said the other man. His name was Henry. "They are hungry. They haven't had any food in a long time."

"The dogs are afraid," said Bill. "They don't want to be eaten by the wolves."

The crying got louder. The men knew that the wolf pack was getting even closer. At night they could see the wolves' eyes watching them.

Night after night, one dog would leave. Then one night, a wolf cry woke Henry up. The last of the dogs was gone.

"Bill," Henry said, waking him up. "Our dogs are gone. The wolves got them all."

Bill was angry. "I'm going to find them," he said.

"You had better not," said Henry. But it was too late. Bill was gone. He didn't come back.

Henry was alone now. Through the white trees, he could see the wolves. One wolf was very close to him. It was the she-wolf. She was the leader of the wolf pack.

Henry was afraid. If he went to sleep, the wolves would eat him. He was almost asleep, when three men on a sled came to help him. The wolves ran away. Henry knew now that he would not be eaten.

The she-wolf watched from the trees. She was angry. It was very hard to find food in the winter. The pack would have to go. They had to find more food.
