LOOK ONCE

A tail like this is for the . . .

birds. The stiff feathers on a bird's tail help it steer through the air. When it wants to turn quickly, a bird tips its tail feathers sideways. This bird is called a yellow warbler.

A close-up photograph of a porcupine's quills. The quills are long, cylindrical, and light brown in color, with dark, sharp tips. They are arranged in a dense, overlapping pattern, creating a textured, spiky appearance. The background is a soft, out-of-focus white.

LOOK ONCE

This animal's fur is spiny, not furry. You wouldn't want to pet it!
