Eat My Dust!

Henry Ford's First Race

by Monica Kulling
illustrated by Richard Walz

Henry Ford liked to drive.
He liked to drive into town.
People got excited
when they saw him.

Henry and a mechanic
named Spider Huff
went to work.

They put a twenty-six-
horsepower engine
in their race car.

One horsepower equaled
the pulling power
of one horse.

That meant Henry's car
could beat any horse—
in seconds flat!

The races were held at a track
near Detroit, Michigan.

Henry entered
the ten-mile race.

The prize was $1,000.

Eight thousand people
filled the stands that day.
